PPR's Domination of the Army

1. The RP PPR regards the Polish Army as a party instrument. It maintains its control of the Army by filling top echelons with officers who are susceptible to party influence. The ideal general, from the RP point of view, is a man without independence, ambition, or specific capabilities as a leader. Such a man is less likely to rebel against PPR authority, or to enlist subordinate officers in a concerted attack upon the PPR or the UB. General Berling, commander of the Kosciuszko Division in 1944-5, was relieved of his command because he was independent, well-liked by his troops, and antagonistic toward the PPR and the UB. Marshal Zymierski, Commander in Chief of the Polish Army, is neither liked by his troops nor by the nation. He is, however, a perfect tool for the PPR which elevated him to his command and relies upon his grateful subservience.
2. The ranks of the Polish Army are recruited largely from the farms. As the peasant masses are generally anti-PPR, that party's control of the Army must be exercised through monopoly of top commands, either by PPR members or by Soviet Army officers. Jacob Berman, Secretary of the P, stated that "...we will keep Soviet personnel in all places where there is even a shadow of doubt about the loyalty of higher officers." The following data regarding the location, composition, etc., of various Polish Army units show a preponderance of Soviet officers in ranking positions.

Polish Army Operations in Soviet Territory

17. The following incident lends credibility to unconfirmed reports that Polish Army units have been employed against the UPA in Soviet territory. Shortly after Gen Swierczowski's death, large columns of Polish troops from the Poznan Divisions passed eastward through Krasno toward the Soviet frontier. It was officially announced that the troops would be used against the UPA. Convoy were guarded closely by the UB and ED, and not even railroad employees were permitted to approach the cars. The troops disappeared completely as far as further identification on Polish soil is concerned. The general assumption is that they continued on into Soviet territory.
